

Moody: 'We don't need to throw a kink in this'

they did move the sign back to where I'm requesting it to be moved. That was what the FWC torpedoed because the way things were done. I had hoped when I heard about this hearing that history would get involved and you would put the end of it back to where you agreed to before."

Bishop said FWC might accept another change, but added he couldn't say for sure that it wouldn't delay the process again.

"FWC is going to take into consideration that people have got up to get by that oyster bar," Moody said. "He's not going to sit there right at the sign and say you just passed the sign going too fast. The officers are going to use some common sense before writing a ticket, I'm sure."

"Well, I sure hope they do," Ridgeway said.

"I can see where people don't want their docks tore up... but then if you have a place there and you're a fisherman and you can't get out at a slow speed, I don't know," Commission Chair

Pam Feagle said.

"It may be best to leave it as it is," Ridgeway said. "Whatever you folks decide, I'll try to abide to. There are no hard feelings on my part at all. I appreciate you letting me talk."

"Well, on advice of our attorney and the commissioner in that district saying we need to leave it alone, what do the rest of you think?" Feagle asked the board.

"It's been a long time," Moody said, suggesting the county could try to adjust the sign's location later if it turned into an issue. "We don't need to throw a kink in this as long it's been."

At the end of the discussion, Commissioner Thomas Demps made a motion to approve the draft ordinance as written, with Commissioner Sean Murphy seconding. The measure passed unanimously.

According to FWC's notice published July 31, the agency has also approved the change.

"Taylor County is required to adopt the Commission approved draft ordinance without amendment," the notice states.

left after a two-year stint in which he turned around a stagnant football program to lead the Indians to a 10-2 record and Class 1A regional finalist spot in 2018.

Chieffland got someone with even more success and state titles to take over head coaching spot this year, as former Port St. Joe

Head Coach John Palmer came out of retirement and moved to Levy County to take over the reins for the Indians.

Palmer led Port St. Joe to Class 1A state titles in 2005 and 2014.

Palmer began his coaching career at Bronson as well as having stops at Eustis and his alma mater Brooksville Hernando.

Palmer totaled 11 years in Port St. Joe, where he went 149-40 and won two state championships.

Chieffland will enter the game with a veteran squad that is very talented in several positions.

The Indians were 10-1 through the regular season last year before they found themselves matched up with Madison County in the second round of the playoffs where their journey ended due to a blowout victory by Madison 49-14.

Chieffland's one loss in the regular season was against Hawthorne, who defeated the Indians 42-14.

Chieffland is led by talented and elusive senior quarterback Ty Corbin, who is coming off a big season in which he completed 45 out of 80 passes for 936 yards (56.3 percent) with 12 touchdowns and just three interceptions.

Corbin also scrambled for 400 yards on 102 carries

(3.9 avg.) and recorded 12 rushing touchdowns.

Corbin's favorite target is likely to be Amonte Young, who caught 14 passes for 422 yards (30.1 avg.) and seven touchdowns during the 2018 season.

Taylor County's first regular season game will be next Friday, August 23, as they will host the Dixie County Bears beginning at 7 p.m. in Dorsett Stadium.
